Using the contact paper meant we didn't need to fuss around with glue, so the mandalas were created quickly and easily. It did mean that when you put the tissue paper down it was stuck in that spot forever, even if you changed your mind, but that led to some interesting experiments with overlapping colours, and some lateral thinking to change 'mistakes' into master pieces.

I've discovered a whole new category of paper crafts to do with my Cricut the other day, it's layered mandalas. I'll admit, I had seen a couple of these on Pinterest and vinyl mandalas are hugely popular but to be honest, I've never been super into that whole bohemian vibe unless it's the more modern boho-chic beach look so I wasn't super motivated to design a mandala.

Our mandala began with a simple paper plate- a Chinette paper plate to be exact. I think this supply detail could be a pretty big deal and bears a little experimenting if you're going to branch out and try whatever extra paper plate is stashed in your pantry! Chinette paper plates are a super heavy cardboard type with no waxy coating.

How to create a mandala design in Cricut Design Space

A visual mandala can be symmetrical in its design, with intricate patterns radiating out in a circular grid from a point in the center. Alternatively, an asymmetrical composition of any form—abstract or representational—can also fill a circle and be called a mandala. (Examples can be seen at the end of this paper.) Significance of the Circle
