This is pretty much the toughest part in the whole rug! Cut a small slit in the end of both the strip that is ending and the strip you want to add. Pull the strip you want to add through the slit that you made in the strip that you are adding to.

Finishing the Rug. Once you have braided the rug to the desired width, you can sew the ends of the strips tucked into the underside of the braid. For a more finished look, wrap the last braid with bias tape and sew in place. Wash and dry your rug as you plan to for daily use, and consider adding a non-slip pad for beneath the rug.

Although this book is very attractive, I was disappointed, as I often am with "how to" books, in that the authors are so expert and know their subject so well they cannot or do not put themselves in the position of the neophyte. If you already know how to create a braided rug but need more expert guidance, this is a good book for you.

Amazon.com: Customer reviews: The Braided Rug Book ...

Braided rugs are a classic element of farmhouse style derived from a need for low-cost and efficient decor options. Across decades of American history, braided rugs, sometimes known as rag rugs, were popular for their versatility and frugality. If you'd like to add a rustic touch to your home, a braided rag rug might be just the ticket. You can even make one yourself using some basic ...

The proportions of the finished rug will tell you how long to make the center braid. Generally, the length of the center braid can be determined by subtracting your planned rug's width from its length. For example, a 2-by-3-foot rug will need 1 foot of center braid, while a round rug only needs a few inches for the center braid.
